Grumpy looking cat breed

Picture: Animal Picture Agency/Photographer's Choice RF/Getty Images You have to wonder how it came to be that cats were domesticated in the first place. If you've ever experienced an angry, wild cat, you know they're not the most pleasant creatures around. It must have been one of those super friendly cats that you run up and down every now and then, it's the first time it's been started. It wandered some farmer, rubbed on his leg, maybe flipped over to play with something and get his belly rubbed. Once that happens, they're hard to resist. Now that we have cats all over the world, and there are so many different breeds, you can really see how some cats have personality traits that set them apart from others. They're a lot like people - some can be playful, some standoffish, and some are just crazy. Our pets are really a reflection of ourselves. Maybe that means you've got a little cat in you. Maybe your inner cat is just meowing to get out right now. One way to find out for sure is to take this quiz! Tell us something about yourself, and we'll figure out exactly what the breed best represents your inner self. Go try it: it's going to be purr-fect. See what we did there? They can come in almost any color, depending on which cat registry association you are looking at, and have a flat face compared to most other cat breeds. Some descriptions of the breed even the nose must not protruding around the eyes when viewed in the profile. Persians have been seen in many movies, art, commercials and homes over the years and have also been one of the most popular cat breeds for decades. Their coats require regular care, otherwise the result will be a mat. Like many purebreds, they are susceptible to various diseases, including problems with the kidneys and heart. Persians are also known as Persian long hair, Iranian cat and shirazi cat, named after the city of Shiraz, Iran, because they were originally imported from Iran. From their humble beginnings as mousers to their promotion to spiritual beings in some garfield cultures and its lasagna, our history with felines has been long and very interesting. Cats traveled all over the world on our sides. They live in our homes and provide company and inspiration. What other animal, but a cat could take up residence in a pet store or wine bar as hundreds of strangers come and go every day? What other than a cat could put up with people working outside the house all day and not even bat when they come home, but later curl up in your lap to show your appreciation that you remembered to take the food out? It's no coincidence that we've accepted cats as one of the few animals we have in our home, wandering freely around the property as they see fit. They're little bundles of personality that just make life better. But have you ever wondered how you would adapt to life in their world? You could live life like a cat, don't you think? What cat would you be, even? Lucky for you, we have a team of cat experts. Answer a few simple questions for us and we'll look deep into your inner cat, and discover an underrated kind of cat that's just clawing at the door to get out.
